Personally, we are less interested in getting to the moon than we are in getting home safely from the office every night.—Herbert A. Leggett, in Arizona Progress.

The Conduct of a Lawsuit

"The proper, industrious and intelligent conduct of a lawsuit requires an immense concentration, an unlimited effort. There is no excuse for second best work—a lawyer who regulates his effort by his fees is a traitor to his profession and his oath. This is . . . our distinction from tradesmen—a merchant may properly sell a second best article for a lesser price, but a lawyer must, whatever the fee, throw his whole abilities into any case, regardless of pay. He has no second best talents for sale. What he sells is his best, and must be paid for as such, by such as can pay."—From an address before the Vancouver, B.C. Bar Association by Mr. Justice Wilson of the Supreme Court of British Columbia.
